

ABSTRACT

Antonius Dicky Satriaji, 2017, 50134832 N "Comparison of leadership roles in terms of characteristics and experience (Case study in MV Pan Global)", Thesis of Nautical Study Program, Diploma IV Program, Merchant Marine Polytechnic Semarang, First Supervisor : Capt. H. Suherman, M.Mar, the Second Supervisor : Sri Purwantini, SE, S.Pd, MM

Leadership is important in an organization. Either profit organization or non profit. In all life a group needs a leader. To be a leader must go through various stages so as to be a good leader not born but made, the process of making someone a leader is called the science of leadership. Leadership can not be separated by discipline, because it is a very close relationship.

This thesis is an exposition, the research to explain and explain the object under study. The data used is data that has been collected at the time of the author carry out the practice screen for one year. The data obtained will be processed and arranged systematically and regularly.

In solving the problem, the authors argue that all officers on board must apply good leadership characteristics and instill discipline in them first. A good boss must also understand leadership based on management theory, and make experience as learning.

The frequent misunderstanding over the MV. Pan Global when ABK received orders from officers. This is due to the large number of officers who do not use the approach or give a firm assignment that causes saturation and even a rebellious nature of the order.

Finally the authors can draw the conclusions of the elements in the role of leadership on the ship are closely related to the success in achieving common goals.

Keywords: characteristic, officer, MV. Pan Global